

Gerunds

A gerund is a verb ending in -ing that functions as a noun. That means a gerund can be the subject, object, or complement in a sentence.

- Ex) Playing chess is fun.
- Explanation: Playing comes from the verb “play”, but the word “playing” serves as the subject of this sentence, and means the act of playing.

Directions: Read the paragraph below and circle all gerunds. There are 8 gerunds total.

Being a good neighbor means helping others when they need it and listening carefully to their concerns. Checking in on elderly neighbors shows you care, and sharing useful information about the community keeps everyone informed. Also, respecting quiet hours by keeping noise down is important for a peaceful neighborhood. If you don’t respect people’s right to a peaceful community, you will likely face backlash. Finally, participating in neighborhood events helps build strong friendships and a sense of belonging. It is crucial to create a neighborhood that is kind and welcoming to everyone.

Directions: Write a paragraph about your family custom, traditions, and rules. Use 7 gerunds and circle them.
